Making A Way in Tate County

As a choir of mostly adults lift their voices in "Amazing Grace," the audience begins to cry and smiles fill the room alongside the voices. One would think this is what Heaven must look like.

This is not an average choir. The singers are not professional nor do they have a background in music theory. They're somewhat of a miracle choir. No seriously, they're called The Miracles.

Composed of adults with intellectual and physical disabilities, they're residents of The Baddour Center in Tate County, Mississippi.

The Baddour Center is a residential facility where men and women with intellectual disabilities are treated with dignity and respect. Residents are given autonomy to make their own choices given an atmosphere where they can learn, live, work, worship, and play. The Miracles Choir is one component of that life.

Thanks to United Way of the Mid-South funding, residents of the Baddour Center have an opportunity to achieve a life of self-sufficiency through education, health and financial stability.
